Biographical sketch, Gen O'Donnell

Before the war in the Philippines was two days old, General O'Donnell earned the Distinguished Flying Cross. Forced off the ground by an enemy air attack upon Clark Field, Manila, he proceeded individually to Vigan where he attacked a heavy cruiser and destroyer escort. Because of trouble with the bomb releases, he had to make five runs over the target while subjected to heavy antiaircraft fire and, during the last run, to enemy fighters.

From January 20, 1942, when he arrived in Java, until the first of March, when that country was taken by the Japanese, General O'Donnell served as operations officer of the Far Eastern Air Force. He then was evacuated to India, where he became operations officer of the newly-organized Tenth Air Force.

In March 1943 General O'Donnell became chief of General Henry H. Arnold's Advisory Council in Washington, D. C., a post he retained until he was appointed Commanding General of the 73d Bomb Wing at Smoky Hill Army Air Field at Salina, Kansas, a year later. He trained the wing for six months and then led it to Saipan to begin the B-29 attacks on Japan. In November 1944 General O'Donnell led the first B-29 attack on Tokyo.

General O'Donnell was assigned to Air Materiel Command headquarters at Wright Field in December 1945, and became deputy chief of the Engineering Division. He remained there until August 1946, when he was made Director of Information of the AAF. In September 1947 after USAF headquarters was established, he was designated Director of Air Information in the Directorate of Public Relations. In January 1948 he was appointed steering and coordinating member of the military representation on the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, Canada-United States; the Canada-United States Military Cooperation Committee; and the Joint Mexico-United States Defense Commission. He was named Commanding General of the Fifteenth Air Force at Colorado Springs, Colorado, in August 1948, and on November 7, 1949, moved with the headquarters to March Air Force Base, California.

Early in 1950, as a result of United Nations action against Communist forces in Korea, General O'Donnell took a nucleus of his Fifteenth Air Force staff to the Far East to organize and command the Far East Bomber Command, with headquarters in Japan. His first B-29 units to arrive in Japan accomplished the outstanding feat of carrying out a maximum effort bombing mission in Korea 36 hours after the first B-29 touched down in Japan after a fly-over from the United States. During this period of temporary duty, he retained command of the Fifteenth Air Force, with headquarters at March Air Force Base. He returned to the United States on January 18, 1951.

On May 1, 1953, General O'Donnell became Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at Air Force Headquarters, Washington, D. C.

IMMEDIATE RELEASE

MAXWELL FIELD, ALA., 13 December 1946---Candor in public relations was urged by Brig. Gen. Emmett O'Donnell, Jr., Director of Information, Headquarters, Army Air Forces, Washington, D.C., in addressing students of the Air University this morning at Maxwell Field. "Public Relations should not be confused with show business," he added.

The Air Force is responsible for the <sup>air</sup> security of the United States and it is the job of public relations to keep the public thoroughly informed on what is being done towards that end, according to General O'Donnell, who said "that showmanship and ballyhoo not only are not needed but not wanted." He explained the Army Air Force must present <sup>its</sup> problems, gains, and efforts to the public in an honest and frank way with no glorification.

Gen. O'Donnell stated "the Air University is the best school in either the Army or Navy today. He recalled that it was started right after V-J Day as a "real effort and a good one."

In urging candor, Gen. O'Donnell stressed the necessity of telling the public that "we have to rebuild what we threw away by rapid demobilization and it will cost tremendous amounts of money," adding that if "we don't pay money we may have to pay in life and blood. The public knows we had the most powerful air force in the world on V-J Day and they also know that we are left with a very inadequate one through rapid demobilization and drastic cuts in the budget."

Gen. O'Donnell flew here from Washington to address the students of the Air Command & Staff School and the Special Staff School of the Air University on the "objects of public relations."

IMMEDIATE RELEASE

JANUARY 23, 1951

LI 5-6700, Ext. 75131

FOR THE PRESS:

The Air Force today made public the following letter written by General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, USAF Chief of Staff, and addressed to Major General Emmett O'Donnell:

January 23, 1951

Major General Emmett O'Donnell, Jr.
Commanding General
Fifteenth Air Force
March Air Force Base
Riverside, California

Dear General O'Donnell:

The published reports quoting you as urging the immediate use of the atom bomb on Communist China caused considerable concern to the Air Force. After personal investigation I am now confident that your remarks did not urge that course of action. Because of my very high regard for your record and value to the Air Force, I am very pleased that this is so.

I feel certain you realize that Air Force personnel must use care in public remarks so that they will not be subject to misinterpretation.

I trust that your able leadership which showed up so excellently in Korea will stand the country in good stead in your return to active command of the Fifteenth Air Force, a move which I directed at the urgent request of General LeMay. Your resumption of this command is based upon recognition of the high importance of the Strategic Air Command in the presently expanding Air Force.

Sincerely,

/S/ HOYT S. VANDENBERG
Chief of Staff, United States Air Force

END
